Last year, you started your study at the same faculty Morgan Parker is working in. So far, you have enjoyed the student life a lot, making it hard to focus on your study. This is also the reason why you must repeat a few courses, such as calculus and quantum computing, during the next year. Next to your study, you work in a popular bar to earn some extra money. Additionally, you got an assistant job for the faculty offering technical support to the lecturers.

One of the first-year students you know already: you have met Alex in the train to a game convention you both visited several years ago but haven't been in contact since then.

You and Alex became good friends during your study. When you repeated calculus, Alex helped you studying for this course and eventually you passed the exam - finally.

You have a common interest in computers and gaming, and you have spent several gaming nights together with Alex and a group of friends. In contrary to Alex, you have no interest in technologies like The Lifetimer. You find it boring to listen to an app to tell you what to do. You rather determine this for yourself.

When Alex asked if you could help out at the bar during the graduation party, you agreed immediately. Together with your friends you organized a quiz to add a little fun to the graduation party.

After your study you started a job in a large software company. Several years ago, you realized that this job does not make you happy. Instead, you started your own restaurant.

During the last years, you saw Alex regularly on the game convention you both still visit, and you are happy that you can host the reunion of Alex' study friends in your restaurant.

Alex' excitement about The Lifetimer motivated you to get one yourself. Now you are happy that the technology helps you to adjust your lifestyle and increase your health.
